Introduction

Although I'm a potter, I didn't start making vases until I felt I needed them. The slender lilies and assertive daisies I plucked from my front yard required containers, and so my first vases were simple cylinders—pieces I could use in my kitchen and fill with flowers. But I soon began experimenting with forms and surfaces, producing vases that served the bouquets they held but also had identities of their own when empty.

Stanton Hunter
Plane Vase #1 | 2003

A vase is typically thought of as an object that enhances something—a tulip or a dinner setting. Yet the best vases transcend service and stand on their own as art. Creating a vase that can speak for itself takes hard work and a definite vision, and that's part of what makes the form challenging and exciting. The vase's capacity for both function and decoration—a double identity of sorts—enriches its potential as a creative object.

For contemporary potters, the vase is a source of enduring inspiration, because it can serve as a model for a wide range of techniques and ideas. It has a rich legacy in many cultures—Greek, Roman, Chinese, Japanese, Russian, Native American, and the list goes on. Because vases have long enhanced the lives of the people who own them through both use and aesthetic appeal, many of the sensible aspects of the form have developed over time into decorative properties. I've seen wonderful vases with handles constructed over their tops to help support heavy flowers. I've seen pitchers that can't pour, because they were created to be vases. The handles and the spouts that create the profiles of these pieces are more appealing when the pitchers stand empty.

I set to the task of jurying this book with an awareness of both the vast history of the ceramic vase and of the purposes it serves in our society today. An object of diverse abilities and possibilities, the vase reflects and supports our rituals, our personal styles, and our practical needs. Because we've seen centuries of variation on the form, I was curious as to whether contemporary artists were still able to interpret the vase in ways that were experimental and original.

I needn't have wondered. The submissions for 500 Vases were incredibly varied and inventive, broad in terms of idea and aesthetic. In order to formulate an approach to the selection process, I divided images into categories, including technique (wood fire, majolica, slip cast) and concept (humor, political reference, historical allusion), as well as combinations of these.

I looked for work that reflected the individual spirit of its maker. A fresh style, a unique approach—qualities that distinguish one artist from another—attracted me to many of the pieces included here. As I reviewed the images, I experienced an affirmation of what I suspected—that contemporary ceramics is alive and well, and that the vase remains an accommodating form, a category of inquiry for artists that is still rich with potential after all these centuries.

With pieces that will appeal to a wide range of tastes, 500 Vases is an inclusive collection. Elegant stem-shaped vessels are featured alongside innovative flower bricks and traditional tulipieres. There are vases inspired by people (Bad Girl Series: Josephine Baker Vase), and vases named after places (Kansas City Bud Vase). There are pieces that will make you laugh out loud (Flower Bed), and pieces that will make you think (Fierce Tulips Planning Their Escape from the Superstore). The qualities of craftsmanship and concept are remarkable. Working with so many wonderful images has inspired me to go back into the studio and continue my own explorations of this timeless form.

A work of art can reveal a great deal about the era that produced it, and I think this collection speaks volumes about our own. We're proud to share it with you.

About the Juror

Julia Galloway was born and raised in New England. Her utilitarian pottery has been exhibited across the United States and Canada, and it is in the permanent collections of the Long Beach Museum of Art in Long Beach, California; the Renwick Gallery of the Smithsonian American Art Museum in Washington, D.C.; and the Art Gallery of Nova Scotia in Halifax, Nova Scotia. She has participated in more than 30 solo exhibitions and 300 group exhibitions. For nine years she taught ceramics at the School for American Crafts at the Rochester Institute of Technology in Rochester, New York. She lives in Missoula, Montana, where she is a Professor of Ceramics and chair of the School of Art at the University of Montana.

Acknowledgments

On behalf of the staff of Lark Books, I want to thank all the ceramists who submitted images of their beautiful work for consideration. 500 Vases was made to showcase the innovation and excellence of modern potters. It succeeds, I believe, precisely because of the fine work being created today, and the generosity of the artists to share their creations with us.

I am indebted to our juror, Julia Galloway, a master ceramist and fine teacher, for bringing her great expertise and passion to the project. At Lark Books, Suzanne Tourtillott launched the book, and the team of Julie Hale, Dawn Dillingham, Larry Shea, Gavin Young, and Val Anderson did fine work in editorial. Kay Holmes Stafford laid out the book with great care, and our art department's Megan Kirby, Shannon Yokeley, and Jeff Hamilton offered invaluable efforts.

Writing for all of us, I hope you enjoy this book, and the remarkable work featured on its pages, for years to come.
